The Formentera Department of Mobility reports that from next week, as part of the island's Sustainable Mobility Strategy adopted last year, the speed limit in the centre of town along Avinguda de la Mola will be lowered ten kilometres per hour (km/h) to thirty km/h.

Tracing the change to a call from the El Pilar Residents' Association, which had advocated "a significant reduction of the vehicle speed limit" on the town's main arterial, mobility conseller Rafael González confided that the measure was already envisioned in the Mobility Strategy. He additionally indicated that the more restrictive limit would be accompanied by randomised speed traps set up by Formentera Local Police and enforced by means of a mobile radar unit.

"Our hope is that we'll see drivers hitting the brakes substantially", said González, who noted that traffic on the road typically spikes on market days.
